BOOK SERIES LAUNCH & CALL FOR MANUSCRIPTS

Spears Studies in African and African Diaspora History

Spears Books, an independent publisher of African/Africana books and member of the African Books Collective (ABC) is delighted to launch its book series in African and African Diaspora History. With dozens of titles in print and electronic formats, Spears Books has distinguished itself as an innovative and dynamic publisher that takes pride in the rigour of its editorial process, the aesthetics of its designs and the global reach and affordability of its titles. In this regard, Spears Books aims to become a leading platform for scholarship in African history.

The series advisory board is made up of distinguished scholars in Africa, Europe and North America. We're particularly interested in a variety of titles that range from single monographs to edited volumes insofar as they engage with issues of African history and the diaspora. Area specializations that may be considered by the board include but are not limited to economic, political and social history. The board is especially interested in accounts of people's economic and social activities during the colonial and postcolonial periods – e.g. fashion, dress, labour unions, education, youth, religion and religious movements, journalism, popular culture, literature, film, art, and women's histories.

To submit a proposal for the book series, include the following core items: a) a concise description of the book, outlining your rationale, approach, main themes, objectives and any unique features; b) an abstract of about 200-300 words; c) a table of contents and d) a sample chapter, preferably, the introduction. Should you prefer to be more detailed, a proposal form is available for completion.
